NEVER IN DRINKS

DRINKS TO AVOID DURING SUMMER PARTIES

Summer is a time for celebration, but it's also important to be careful about what you drink. Alcoholic beverages can cause dehydration, so avoiding them during summer is essential. The heat and, in some cases, mixed with moisture is enough to drain the living electrolytes out of your body. A drink usually cools us down, but despite the majority of water content in drinks, alcohol can dehydrate any living being.

Does that mean we stop drinking our favourite alcoholic beverages during the summer or during the day? Day or night, you live through it all. It's the seasons that matter. We are humans, and thus we do what we do best, adapt. We wear jackets and thick clothing during winter and vice versa during summer. Alcohol accelerates body temperature, and when the atmosphere is incompatible, it may cause health issues. Almost every type of alcoholic beverage contains some type of spirit, aka liquor, made by fermenting in a sugar brew into CO₂ and ethanol.

It has to be done at the perfect time to avoid poisoning, and the best wineries in the world master that. Based on the distillation process, the percentage of average ABVs (alcohol by volume) may differ from as low as 8% to as high as 80-90%. If you still want to enjoy your drinks during summer, we have you sorted party being.
